It's about Time: A Review of Research on Time and Leadership

Tzu-Ting Lin[1] and Bor-Shiuan Cheng[2]

[1]Department of Business Administration, Shih Hsin University

[2]Department of Psychology, National Taiwan University

Time should be an important aspect of organizational theory, but it has been neglected for decades, especially in leadership research. In order to consider leadership from a temporal perspective, we examine extant leadership research, namely leader and leadership that refers to temporal variables in its theorizing and/or empirical testing. We also specify some directions about how future theory development and refinement should incorporate time. By doing so, we hope to encourage future researchers to get involved in and invest in leadership research on time issues.

Keywords: time, temporal perspective, leaders, leadership